Keeping a pet dog

People keep a dog as a pet for having a liking for them and also as a constant watchman by night and day. There are signboards at the gate of persons keeping dogs as pets 'Beware of dogs' which means that the dogs kept as pets would not allow any unknown person to enter the premises of the house. This is a great advantage and great protection. There are different species of dogs, some are just lovely, furry, fluffy beings who sit crouched cosily in the lap harmless ones harmless even to an outsider. There are the other ones who are the bigger ones in size and ferocious indeed. They can tear an intruder apart, would bark aloud to awaken the whole house. They may be ferocious to an outsider or an intruder but to their master and to the family they are docile and cool abiding by their every command or direction. The master and the dog are inseparable. When the master is back home after his day's work, it must jump up to reach the master, feel contentment only after being given a loving pat. Faithful they are to that extent that stories go about some of them who gave up food and drink and gave up their lives after their master was no more.

Dogs have a great instinct for learning. Though animals, they exhibit a great sense of intelligence. They can be trained even by the crime-investigating agencies and have successfully worked out to catch the criminal.

Loving, faithful, ferocious, and intelligent with an instinct to learn that is all about dogs as pets.
